1. INTRODUCTION AND OBJECTIVES

The Publisher Research Council (PRC), together with Nielsen, have combined their two independent data sources, the PRC's Publisher Audience Measurement Survey (PAMS) and Nielsen's Consumer Panel Survey (CPS), using data fusion.

This enhanced survey will provide the industry with rich information on almost 200 consumer goods categories and more than 3 000 individual brands.

This will create a full picture of reading, lifestyle, shopping behaviour and product consumption amongst South African consumers.

2. THE PRC'S PAMS

The PAMS 2017 survey represents 4 months of data, collected from mid-July to mid-November 2017.

PAMS is a National survey, interviewing Adults 15+ years old, in all communities across South Africa. A large sample of 17 386 adults was achieved, across 10 000 households.

The PAMS survey covers reading, digital consumption, cellphone usage, motor vehicle and financial information, retail stores and lifestyle.

For further technical information regarding the PAMS survey, please refer to the PAMS Technical Report on the PRC's website: http://www.prc.za.com/wp-content/uploads/2018/04/PAMS-2017-Technical-Report.pdf

3. NIELSEN'S CPS

Nielsen's CPS (Consumer Panel Services) has been in existence for over 20 years in South Africa. CPS provides clients with key drivers behind what consumers are doing.

Data is collected in households at least once a month resulting in some 48 000 household visits a year with a measurement of 200 000 shopping occasions. CPS provides measurement of consumer goods categories including food, beverages, personal care and home care.

The National scanned data used in the PAMS/CPS fusion, was collected over 12 months (April 2017 to March 2018) across 3 000 households.

For further information on Nielsen's CPS, please contact Matthew Johnston matthew.johnston@nielsen.com

4. NIELSEN'S PAMS/CPS DATA FUSION PROCESS

This PAMS/CPS data fusion was conducted by Andrew Whitney, Nielsen's Data Science Lead in Australia.

The following is a summary of the fusion methodology used by Nielsen:

Data fusion is a respondent-level matching of two datasets to create a unified respondent-level database that simulates a single-source dataset. Common characteristics across the two panels (known as "linking variables") are used to match individuals and/or households across the two panels. The final product is a single database containing data and fields from both samples.

LINKING VARIABLES

Our philosophy on linking variables consists of two core concepts:

- 1. Linking variables are crucial to the success of a data fusion. They must be good predictors of the key fields of the data fusion, e.g. purchase behaviour and print readership.
- 2. All available linking variables should be used, provided they are well-matched across the two surveys and not statistically redundant.

The selection of linking variables begins with a basic analysis of sample sizes and profiles on the donor and recipient datasets. We produce sample evaluation tables that compare the two datasets' sample sizes and profiles (weighted and unweighted) for all potential linking variables. This allows us to assess whether the linking variables satisfy two conditions that are necessary to allow their use as linking variables – completeness and congruence.

Where significant differences occur between characteristics from the two surveys, we establish whether the difference is definitional or sample-related. If the differences are definitional, the characteristic may be collapsed into a more robust classification that is comparable across both surveys. If this is not possible, the characteristic is rejected from the list of linking variables. If the differences are sample-related, perhaps due to response bias or by design, we accommodate these differences in the fusion process in the way we set up the matching structure or by re-weighting the data.

To optimize the quality of the matching between two panels that represent the same population but are measured for different purposes (for example, CPS panel and PAMS survey), the linking variables should include household characteristics but also media consumption features. To achieve this requirement a special survey was conducted among the CPS panel households to collect basic media consumption information, such as whether respondents read a daily newspaper and time spent reading newspapers and other media.

IMPORTANCE WEIGHTS AND CRITICAL CELLS

Ideally, we would like to find an identical survey respondent, for every respondent on the recipient survey, but this is not always feasible. Where an exact match is not found, the donor/recipient pair with the smallest distance is selected. To optimize this process, we calculate importance weights and define critical cells.

Importance Weights

The relative importance of each linking variable is determined by the variables' ability to predict variations in the "key output variables" that are the object of the data fusion – for example, fusing purchase behaviour and readership of newspapers. If a linking variable is a good predictor of both purchase behaviour and newspaper readership, it will be given more importance in the fusion process than other variables that are less predictive. This higher importance weight will result in a closer matching of the two samples.

The relative importance of each linking variable in predicting variations is calculated using Analysis of Variance (ANOVA). Since there are many linking variables related to highly correlated media and purchase behaviours, we use principal components analysis to orthogonalize and reduce the number of variables to a manageable number, while still being able to explain at least 75% of the variance. Aside from reducing large datasets in a statistically efficient way, the importance weight calculation is facilitated since the ANOVAs can be run on each of the orthogonal principal components and then summed.

Critical Cells

The fusion process is performed within sub-groups, meaning that the data fusion ensures an exact match on these characteristics e.g. province and population group.

DISTANCE MEASUREMENT CALCULATION

Each linking variable element is converted to a numerical format (e.g. Male = 1, Female = 2) and a distance measurement is calculated for all donor/recipient survey respondent pairs across the two surveys. This measurement is a number greater than or equal to zero - the smaller the number, the more similar the respondents and the better their potential matching in the fusion process. Those identical in every respect will have a distance of zero.

While a simple measurement would sum the absolute differences across the variables, we use an amended version of Mahalanobis' Distance. This more sophisticated approach takes into account the following characteristics of the linking variables:

• Their relative scale, e.g. the difference between male (1) and female (2) can only be 1, while the difference in age between 18 and 99 can vary. A difference of 1 in gender is much more important than a difference of 1 in age.

- Their correlation, e.g. a household size of 1 has a 100% correlation with no children in the home. By taking into account the linking variables' correlation, we avoid over-stating differences between respondents in these categories.
- Their relative importance, in predicting the market measurements we're interested in, i.e. product purchases and readership of newspapers.

The end product of the distance measurement calculation is a Distance Score Table for each critical cell. This is then inputted into the matching algorithm to generate the fusion matching.

MATCHING ALGORITHM

The matching algorithm appends a single donor to each recipient using the statistical distance to identify the closest matches. It also restricts the frequency of donor use to optimize the use of the donor sample.

The end product of this stage is a fusion linkage file which lists each recipient respondent ID and its fused donor respondent ID. This allows the full data fusion file to be created.

TYPES OF FUSION

Unconstrained statistical matching

One donor can be matched with one or more recipients. A recipient is matched with only one donor. The recipient database is not modified. The final weight is the recipient weight.

Except for some restriction on the number of times a donor can be used, this is all the control that this technique exerts. The result is that there is no direct control over the response distributions of variables from the donor database.

Constrained statistical matching

Both donors and recipients can be matched more than once. The sum of the weights within the critical cells must match among the two databases. If they don't match, one database will be re-proportioned on the basis of the other one. The final weight will be fragmented for both donors and recipients.

This technique keeps the original distributions intact. Constrained matching does require more sophisticated software and more processing power than unconstrained matching, but the advantage of keeping distributions intact makes it a better choice for this particular type of fusion.

The CPS-PAMS fusion uses a Constrained statistical matching (Many-to-one) technique of constrained matching in order to preserve the currency data as much as possible.

FUSED VARIABLES

Fused variables are all the variables belonging to the donor samples that are carried over to the recipient sample on the basis of the fusion matching.

QUALITY CONTROL

Nielsen performs a series of quality checks to assess the validity of the fused data:

1. Overall closeness of matching

Assessment of how closely the data fusion process has matched the two samples, taking into account the statistical distance measure used in the data fusion process to determine the closeness of donor and recipient sample respondents. It is calculated as a percentage where 100% indicates a perfect match and 0% no better than random matching averaged across all the linking variables sample by the data fusion.

2. Profile correlation

Each donor sample Fused Variable has a distinct profile across demographic reporting variables and across linking variables. The extent to which the data fusion has preserved these traits can be measured by the correlation of donor sample and fused profile skews, and also regression to the mean of these skews.

3. Regression to the mean

This is the tendency for outlying data points to move closer to an average figure. In this case we assess whether differences in the profile of fused variables are less marked than the differences in the donor sample profile.

FUSION OF CPS ONTO PAMS

Sample Sources Used:

Recipient data: The PRC PAMS Survey

• Donor data: Nielsen's CPS Panel

Linking Variables:

- Age Group
- Presence of children by Age Group (0-3, 4-6, 7-15)
- Household Size
- Household Income
- Language Spoken
- Internet Access

- Read a printed newspaper in last 12 months
- Read a digital newspaper in last 12 months
- When last read a printed newspaper
- When last read a digital newspaper
- Time spent reading a newspaper
- Listen to radio
- Watch TV

Critical Cells:

Defined by the combinations between: Province, Race and Presence of Children

Fused Variables:

From CPS we fuse purchase behaviour, indicating heavy, medium, light and non-buyers, across the product categories and the main brands within each category.

5. DELIVERABLES

The fused dataset contains the identical, original PAMS 2017 data, but is enhanced with an extract of CPS product category and brand data.

The traditional CPS and fused datasets will provide different information, however there will be strong synergies across the two.

The fused dataset provides Heavy, Medium, Light and Total National data for each qualifying category and brand, across all the questions in PAMS.

NUMBER OF PRODUCT CATEGORIES IN FUSED DATASET

187 Product categories are available on the fused dataset.

For a product category to qualify for release on the fused dataset, a minimum of 90 PAMS respondents was required, in a household where this category was purchased.

NUMBER OF BRANDS IN FUSED DATASET

3 138 individual consumer goods brands are available on the fused dataset.

For an individual brand to qualify for release on the fused dataset, a minimum of 30 PAMS respondents was required, in a household where this category was purchased.

2 417 Brands qualified to be split into Heavy, Medium and Light.

6. HEAVY, MEDIUM, LIGHT (HML) CALCULATION

After the CPS dataset was fused into PAMS, the HML categories were calculated for each product category and individual brand.

To calculate the HML groups, a "Best Thirds" approach was used, based on total 12 month purchase units, for each PAMS respondent in the household. The units were looked at on a weighted basis, on the total PAMS population.

For example:

Category A has a range of 1 to 8 total purchased units in the 12 month period. These are then weighted and percentaged to the total PAMS category A purchasers, as demonstrated below:

```
1 Unit - 32.3% - Cumulative: 32.3%
2 Units - 21.8% - Cumulative: 54.1%
3 Units - 18.8% - Cumulative: 72.9%
4 Units - 14.2% - Cumulative: 87.1%
5 Units - 5.9% - Cumulative: 93.0%
6 Units - 2.5% - Cumulative: 95.5%
7 Units - 1.1% - Cumulative: 96.7%
8 Units - 3.3% - Cumulative: 100%
```

For the Light "Best Third", the 1 Unit purchasers can be isolated, which is a total of 32.3%, very close to 33.3% (one third).

For the Heavy "Best Third", the 4 to 8 Unit purchasers provide a total of 27.1%, closer to 33.3%, than the 3 to 8 Unit purchasers, at a total of 45.9%.

This leaves the Medium "Best Third" of 2 to 3 Unit purchasers at 40.6%, which again is closer to 33.3%, than any other combination.

Where a single Unit purchase percentage was far over the Best Third, the Medium and Heavy were then calculated using the best balance of the remaining percentages.

HML CATEGORY/BRAND QUALIFICATION

Only Categories and Brands where there were 3 or more Unit purchase counts that could be split into Best Thirds were released on the fused dataset.

For example:

Category B has a range of 1 to 4 total purchased units in the 12 month period. These are then weighted and percentaged to the total PAMS category B purchasers, as demonstrated below:

1 Unit - 83.2% - Cumulative: 83.2% 2 Units - 0% - Cumulative: 83.2% 3 Units - 0% - Cumulative: 83.2% 4 Units - 16.8% - Cumulative: 100%

Here we have data that does not allow a 3 way split. In this case, regardless of sample, we cannot release a HML calculation, as one of the groups will always be 0%.

DEFINITION OF WEIGHTS RELATED TO PRODUCTS

Both Personal and Household weights are available on the fused dataset, derived from PAMS.

This is how the different weights relate to product categories and brands.

1. PAMS Personal Weight:

The personal weight is based on persons that live in a household that have purchased a brand or a category.

2. PAMS Household Weight:

The household weight is based on households that have purchased a brand or a category.
